

DESSERTS

New Orleans Desserts are pretty unique. You'll find things that people can order in the French Quarter in roadside cafes with awnings complete. Beignets covered in powdered sugar with strong coffee (café au lait) mixed half and half with milk is served daily at the Café Du Monde on Decatur St along the Mississippi River with the St. Louis Cathedral in sight. Rich desserts full of sweetness born of poverty and served like it was meant for kings are a natural part of Louisiana fare. These recipes were originally left out of the printed version of this book due to space available. Space isn't a problem on Kindle so I've decided to offer them to you as lagniappe. Hope you enjoy.
